

Staypineapple Hotel >> A Welcoming Visit

JUL
8

BRANDED EXPEDITION

One of these days (or posts), I'll stop referring to ~our move to Seattle~ but until then, or we have another major life change, Imma keep on chatting about it. Sorry, friends. Anyyyyway, a ~~few months back~~, lies, about 7 months ago, Capp and I made a trip to Seattle one weekend to search for a new home.

We had no idea where we should stay, but after some research on Expedia, we hit a goldmine. Staypineapple Hotel was a dream and we wouldn't have changed a minute of our stay.

The Maxwell Hotel

We found Staypineapple Hotel on Expedia for a killer price and we immediately jumped at the opportunity to book our trip. We settled on their Maxwell Hotel in Queen Anne and felt so relaxed from the moment we checked in. Capp and I dropped our bags and made our way to the bar for a nightcap since we had a full day ahead of us the following day.

The vibe was so chill; there was a handful of people bellied up at the bar listening to a local musician strumming and singing to the tune of his guitar. After our cocktails, we headed upstairs and crashed into bed. It was honestly one of the best sleeps I've had in a long, long time.

The Next Day

After a refreshing sleep, we were up and out the door by 9am for our first apartment tour. As we were leaving, we were offered coffee and breakfast goods. With coffee and muffins in hand, we hit the road. Our day consisted of touring apartments, eating food, and hunting down some more apartments. We ended our evening with a delish dinner at Crow, followed by some drinks at Solo. We made our way back to the Maxwell and fell into another ahmazing deep sleep.

Check out the next morning was a cakewalk. We were thanked for our stay and we were even given the pineapple slippers that were in our room, what a cute little treat!

Hotel FIVE

Not only is the Maxwell Hotel a gem within the Staypineapple Hotel chain, but so is their other hotel in Seattle, Hotel FIVE. A few weeks ago, I made a visit to their other property. You guys, cool things are happening here. I walked in to the lobby and was greeted by their marketing staff and was given a great tour. She showed me the awesome renovations that Hotel FIVE has made to their new bistro. I also got to check out the killer menu of eats.

Talk about an epic spread. The Pineapple Bar and Bistro, newly revamped is a legit cool space. It offers an amazing cocktail menu alongside their eats. They have some pretty great games for entertainment, too. There was a wall-hung Scrabble board, a shuffleboard table, and (if you're my SO Capp) you'll find yourself glued at Ms. Pacman.

Rooms and Lobby

The rooms at Hotel FIVE are just as comparable to that of the Maxwell Hotel; there were spacious rooms that all had the urban vibe seen in the lobby. TBH, I kept eyeing up that bed again because I knew how comfy cozy I was at the Maxwell. Once we were back down in the lobby, I saw visitors grabbing some of the pineapple flavored cupcakes that are put out daily for those staying in the hotel.

Why did I love visiting these two hotels? The attention to detail that was on point. The hotels were filled with amenities and the comforts of home. There were snacks placed in the room, slippers that guests can take home after their stay, and a great spread of food and drinks in the lobby. Let’s not forget the dope beds that I keep talking about. The staff were so warm and welcoming and that was a great factor especially when staying in the Maxwell when we were new to the city.

Next time you’re in Seattle and need a place to stay, seriously, check out a Staypineapple Hotel; it will not disappoint.

*Check back here for more details on the new renovations happening at the Maxwell Hotel this July! In the meantime, check out here for some great things to do in Seattle.

ABOUT BRANDED EXPEDITION

branded expedition is a blog about all things travel related and the reality that comes with travel. The blog is to encourage others to create their own travel journey and to leave the tried and worn out travel guide at home. Readers will find raw and real content on how to make the best of their own journey.

© 2018 branded expedition. All Rights Reserved.